The personal globe

Design: Francesco Toselli

Graphics: Alessandro Maffioletti & Cecilia Marzocchi

Here is a globe that lets you trace a personal travel experience and invites you to mark the places: "I was here"...

At first Here looks bi-dimensional, as an atlas; in just a few seconds it turns into a three-dimensional globe. The graphics enhance the paper's preciousness, tactile quality and texture. Here stands up on its own, it is very light and can be placed anywhere, on a table or bookcase but also on the floor. Here is the world as it should be: as delicate as a poem, both simple and sophisticated, transparent to the point where we can always read our traces on it.

Paper is white. This statement may seem terribly obvious, yet paper's whiteness is far from ordinary. In fact, the invention of white paper can be seen as having cast a bright light over the course of human history.

The analysis of the intersection between atlases and globes has generated a new project which is presented as a flat surface but turns into a three-dimensional and 'pinnable' world.
